

Cayla Revels - I am a dedicated educator, passionate volunteer, and lifelong learner. Born and raised in West Virginia, I earned a Bachelor of Arts in Education K-8 with a minor in English. Throughout my career, I held teaching licenses in West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. I taught in public schools in Gaston County, NC, and York County, SC, for approximately six years before dedicating a decade to homeschooling my two grown daughters.

In addition to my contributions to education, I have a deep love for nature and the outdoors, enjoying activities such as hiking, crocheting, and caring for my flock of chickens. An avid beach lover, I dream of retiring by the ocean someday.

My compassionate spirit shines through in my volunteer work with non-profits like the Innocence Project, where I dedicate my time to supporting incarcerated individuals. This commitment to justice and education extends to my role as a Lead Tutor, where I work with underserved students, inspiring and motivating them to learn.

With a warm heart, a curious mind, and an unyielding passion for teaching, I strive to positively impact my community and the lives of those I touch.
